■ Manager commentary

In February 2025, the Momentum GF Global Equity Fund fell 0.6% in US dollar terms, outperforming the MSCI World Index, which fell 0.7%.

The market remained concerned about US equities due to the potential impact of trade tariffs and the sustainability of earnings from stocks that have benefited from the AI theme.

As a result, European equities had another strong month, rising 3.4% in dollar terms, while the S&P 500 fell 1.3%. From a sector perspective, Consumer Discretionary was the worst performer, falling 6.7%, whereas Consumer Staples gained 4.8%, highlighting market concerns over consumer spending and increasing recession risk. Amazon (-10.7%) and Tesla (-27.6%), both in the Consumer Discretionary sector, were significant contributors to the sector's negative return. The fund is underweight in both stocks.

From a style perspective, Minimum Volatility and High Dividend were the leaders, up 3.4% and 3.2%, respectively, whereas Growth was the laggard, falling 2.8%. This indicates that the market is prioritizing current cash flows over speculating on future earnings growth.

The Portfolio performed well in this more defensive environment. The continued pullback in Magnificent Seven stocks benefited performance from a relative perspective, given our reasonable underweight position versus the index.
