■ Manager commentary

In February 2026, the Momentum GF Global Equity Fund gained 1.0% in US dollar terms, outperforming the MSCI World Index, which rose 0.7%.

Japanese equities were particularly strong following Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi's landslide election victory, which the market interpreted as a positive catalyst for pro-growth spending and tax reform. We hold an overweight position in Japan, and our core exposure through the Morant Wright Fuji Yield Fund contributed meaningfully to performance, rising 12.9% over the month. Elsewhere in Asia, Samsung had an exceptional month, gaining over 30% amid surging demand for its high-bandwidth memory chips, which have become a critical bottleneck in AI data-centre expansion.

Another source of outperformance came from our underweight exposure to semiconductors, particularly Nvidia. Despite quarterly results showing revenue up 73% year on year, the expectation in this stock is so high that it declined more than 7% during the month. Given its significant index weight of over 5%, it detracted roughly 40 bps from the MSCI World Index's return.

The market continues to debate which areas may become "AI losers" as business models come under threat from rapid advancements in artificial intelligence. The software sector has been especially weak in recent months and has grown to become a meaningful component of the index. We have spent considerable time engaging with our underlying managers on this topic, and we remain confident that our software holdings are highly selective, focused on high-quality businesses with strong competitive moats, including proprietary data and assets that AI cannot easily replicate. This selectivity helped our software exposure outperform the broader index in February.
